

Here's a sampling of what teens were exposed to at "Teach Out"

Warning: Graphic Content

In one well-attended workshop, "What They Didn't Tell You About Queer Sex & Sexuality In Health Class: A Workshop For Youth Only, Ages 14-21," the three homosexual presenters acting in their professional capacities coaxed about 20 children into talking openly and graphically about homosexual sex.

[A]ll of the teenagers could write down questions for the homosexual presenters. The first question was read by Julie Netherland (adult facilitator), "What's fisting?"

A student answered this question by informing the class that "fisting" is when you put your "whole hand into the ass or pussy" of another. When a few of the students winced, the Department of Public Health employee offered, "A little known fact about fisting: you don't make a fist like this. It's like this." He formed his hand into the shape of a tear drop rather than a balled fist. He informed the children that it was much easier.

Margot Abels (adult facilitator) told the students that "fisting" is not about forcing your hand into somebody's "hole, opening or orifice" if they don't want it there. She said that "usually" the person was very relaxed and opened him or herself up to the other. She informed the class that it is a very emotional and intense experience.

At this point, a youngster of about 16 asked why someone would want to do that. He stated that if the hand were pulled out quickly, the whole thing didn't sound very appealing to him. Margot Abels was quick to point out that although fisting "often gets a really bad rap," it usually isn't about the pain, "not that we're putting that down." Margot Abels informed him and the class that "fisting" was "an experience of letting somebody into your body that you want to be that close and intimate with." When a child asked the question, "Why would someone do this?" Margot Abels provided a comfortable response to the children, in order to "put them into an exploratory mode."

"Rubbing each others' clits..."

Michael Gaucher (adult facilitator) presented the next question, "Do lesbians rub their clits together?"

Michael Gaucher and Margot Abels asked the kids if they thought it was possible and whether someone would do a "hand-diagram" for the class. No one volunteered, but a girl who looked about 15 or 16 then stepped up to the board and drew a three foot high vagina and labeled each of the labia, the clitoris, and “put up inside the ‘G’-spot.” While drawing, Michael Gaucher told her to use the “pink” chalk, to which Margot Abels responded, “Not everyone is pink, honey.” All of the children laughed.

After the chalk vagina was complete, the children remarked on the size of the “clit,” and the presenters stated that that was a gifted woman. Then Margot Abels informed all of the young girls that, indeed, you can rub your “clitori” together, either with or without clothes and “you can definitely orgasm from it.” Michael Gaucher told the kids that “there is a name for this: tribadism,” which he wrote on the board and told one girl who looked about 14 to “bring that vocabulary word back to Bedford.” Julie Netherland informed the children that it wasn’t too difficult because, “When you are sexually aroused, your clit gets bigger.”

“Should you spit after you suck another boy (or a man)?”

Michael Gaucher read the following from a card: “Cum and calories: Spit versus swallow and the health concerns.” Gaucher informed the children that although he didn’t know the calorie count of male ejaculation, he has “heard that it’s sweeter if people eat celery.” He then asked the boys, “Is it rude not to swallow?” Many of the high school boys mumbled “No,” but one about the age of 16 said emphatically, “Oh no!” One boy, again about the age of 16, offered his advice on avoiding HIV/AIDS transmission while giving oral sex by not brushing your teeth or eating course food for four hours before you “go down on a guy,” “because then you probably don’t want to be swallowing cum.”
